I. THE PROBLEM

Background

In November 1979 the Canadian Education Association, in cooperation with a number of other educational agencies, held a seminar on inservice and retraining of teachers and administrators. The seminar included representatives of major educational sectors from across Canada and input from political and manpower specialists. Participants were concerned that professional development programs did not clearly relate to the needs of Canadian educators. It was concluded that a major barrier to providing adequate programming was the lack of comprehensive and ongoing evaluation programs of teachers and administrators.

The participants generally considered evaluation of teachers and administrators to occur only in three cases: during the first two years of service in a position, during temporary appointments, or in a crisis situation. In addition, it was their general opinion that termination from a position, rather than improved performance, was the major objective for evaluating teachers and administrators.

The Alberta Position

In January 1980, upon receiving the report of the above-mentioned seminar, Dr. E. K. Hawkesworth, Deputy Minister of Alberta Education, requested a survey be done in Alberta to determine current practices and policies involved in the formal evaluation of certificated education staff.

Since 1970, the primary responsibility for teacher evaluation has rested with local jurisdictions. In the most recent study¹ (Holdaway, 1977) on teacher evaluation practices and policies in Alberta, it was found that 83% of Alberta school systems evaluated all teachers new to the system. This study also found 74% of the systems formally evaluated first year teachers and 47% of all systems had a policy on evaluation frequency. In about 95% of all systems the major use of teacher evaluations was to recommend permanent certification or award a permanent contract. Formal evaluations were also frequently used for dismissal (83%), and promotion (61%). While 64% of Alberta school jurisdictions had a policy on frequency of evaluations of tenured teachers, only 29% of the jurisdictions had standard forms for use in conducting and reporting such evaluations.

The 1977 Alberta study did not examine evaluation practices and policies for other certificated personnel, such as in-school administrators, consultants and supervisors, and central office administrators.

Critical Information Needs

The findings of the Holdaway (1977) study were quite similar to the central conclusions and generalizations of the 1979 C.E.A. Seminar. While the ¹ E. A. Holdaway and M. J. Reikie, "Practices and Policies in the Formal Evaluation of Teachers in Alberta," Alberta Education, June 1977.

Holdaway (1977) study dealt with the practices and policies concerning teacher evaluation, it provided no information related to the evaluation of other certificated personnel. Therefore, a broad survey of current practices and policies concerning the formal evaluation of all certificated personnel was a logical undertaking.

If the conclusions of the C.E.A. seminar accurately reflected the evaluation situation for all certificated education staff in Alberta, local school jurisdictions might find it necessary to change their procedures for certificated personnel management.

The survey was conducted by means of a questionnaire which Alberta Education sent to local school jurisdictions. (The questionnaire and covering letter are reproduced in the Appendix of this report.)

This survey attempted to answer the following questions:

1. Is an active policy for teacher evaluation in place in Alberta's local school jurisdictions?
2. Have any changes in teacher evaluation practices and policies occurred since the 1977 study?
3. Is an active policy in place in Alberta's local school jurisdictions for evaluation of other certified personnel, such as in-school administrators, consultants and supervisors, and central office administrators?

The 100 jurisdictions which responded to the survey included: 29 school divisions, 29 counties, 16 separate districts and 26 public districts.

II. FINDINGS

Results of 1980 Survey

This section outlines the findings of the 1980 Alberta Education survey of evaluation policies and procedures.

Table I shows whether or not school systems have written policies and procedures for the evaluation of certificated staff, and Table II shows whether or not these policies are being carried out (as indicated by responses to the questionnaire).

The proportion of jurisdictions having a written policy (Table I) ranged from 44%, for separate districts, to 73%, for public districts. In total, 59% of responding jurisdictions claim a written policy, but only 47% supplied copies of the policy.

Table I

PERCENTAGE OF JURISDICTIONS HAVING WRITTEN POLICIES AND PROCEDURES

N Type of System (Number)	Have Policy	Copy Supplied	Do Not Have Policy
1. School Divisions (29)	59*	48*	41
2. Counties (29)	55	45	45
3. Separate Districts (16)	44	44	56
4. Public Districts (26)	73	50	27
TOTAL (100)	59	47	41
* 59% of the divisions (17) claimed written policy but only 48% (14) supplied copies.

As shown in Table II, only 55% of the jurisdictions which had a written policy reported that they actually carried out that policy. Twenty-one percent of jurisdictions reported that they were not carrying out the policy, and 24% did not respond to this question.

Table II

IMPLEMENTATION OF WRITTEN POLICIES BY JURISDICTIONS*

	Implemented	Not Implemented	No Response
1. School Divisions	48	28	24
2. Counties	62	21	17
3. Separate Districts	44	19	38
4. Public Districts	62	15	23
TOTAL	55	21	24
* Relate to Table I. For example, 59% of School Divisions claimed written policy and 48% of this group implemented their policy.

The most common explanation given by respondents for not carrying out policy was the use of informal evaluation methods. Written responses also indicated that the superintendent has the major responsibility for ensuring evaluation policies are carried out. It was found, however, that approximately 10% of the jurisdictions assigned this responsibility to other personnel (for the purposes of this survey a "formal evaluation" meant a written report leading to a recommendation or rating which is submitted to the central office of the jurisdiction).

Table III examines which certificated staff are formally evaluated. In total, 45% of the jurisdictions evaluate all of their teaching staff and 3% do not evaluate any teaching staff. While some caution must be exercised in interpreting other categories, particularly the consultant/supervisor category, it is apparent that teaching staff are the primary recipients of evaluation.

Table IV shows that evaluation of teaching staff occurs primarily during the first year with a jurisdiction.

Table V indicates the average number of formal evaluations of staff who are in their first year with a jurisdiction. While the majority of certificated staff new to the profession (72%) are evaluated two or more times only 19% are evaluated annually. Evaluation of staff new to the system tends to be nearly equally divided between annually, twice a year, and 3 to 4 evaluations per year.

Table VI reveals that the frequency of evaluation for tenured staff in all categories is much lower than for non-tenured staff. Of particular interest are the large percentages in the categories labelled "never" or "other." The latter probably means "not on a regular basis."

As shown in Table VII, almost one-half of the jurisdictions do not use a standard form for evaluating teaching staff. It is also evident that a minority of jurisdictions employ a standard form for evaluating other certificated staff; for example, 22% use such a form for in-school administrators and 5% use one for consultants and supervisors.

Formal evaluation can be used for a number of purposes. Table VIII lists some of these purposes in declining order of use. Many tentative conclusions could be drawn from this data. For instance, it is interesting to note that when the various uses are ranked, "evaluation for improving performance" ranks first for in-school administrators, consultants/supervisors, and central office administrators, while it ranks third for teachers.

Comparison of 1977 and 1980 Data

Because of differences in approach, only certain comparisons can be made between the data collected by Holdaway in 1977² and that of the brief 1980 Alberta Education survey. In the following analysis (Tables X to XIV), "1977" refers to the Holdaway study and "1980" refers to the study described herein.

It is notable that 77% of the jurisdictions reported that they provided a copy of the evaluation to the person being evaluated, 15% said they did not provide a copy, and 8% gave no response. In over half of the formal evaluations the person being evaluated did not sign the report.

Table X, which shows the number of formal evaluations during the first year of teaching, reveals a distinct shift to more frequent evaluation. In 1980 72% of beginning teachers were evaluated two or more times, as compared to 53% in 1977. No jurisdictions reported that they did not evaluate beginning teachers in 1980 (although the "other" category could certainly contain teachers who were not formally evaluated).

² Holdaway, Op. cit.

Table XI presents the categories of teachers formally evaluated each year. In 1980, no jurisdictions reported not evaluating any teachers, as compared to 4% in 1977. In 1978, an increasing number of tenured teachers, teachers new to the system, and teachers new to teaching were being evaluated on an annual basis.

Table XII presents "frequency of formal evaluation of tenured teachers." This table shows distinct reduction in the "other" category, which usually is chosen when the jurisdiction has no firm practice. In other words, in 1980 there was a general increase in regularity of evaluations.

Table XIII compares the uses made of formal evaluations of teachers in 1977 and 1980. While minor changes have taken place in most categories, the most pronounced shift has occurred in the use of formal evaluations to improve performance. This change occurred in every type of jurisdiction. The total change was from only 18% of jurisdictions reporting this use in 1977 to 83% in 1980.

Summary of Findings

1. Of the jurisdictions responding in 1980, 59% reported having a written evaluation policy but only 47% provided copies of their policy.
2. Of the jurisdictions who reported that they had a written evaluation policy, only 55% reported that they carried out that policy. Of the others, 21% reported that the policy was not being implemented and 24% gave no response.
3. Of the responding jurisdictions, 45% reported that they formally evaluate all teaching staff and 3% reported that they do not evaluate any teaching staff.
4. Teaching staff are the primary recipients of formal evaluation; there is a significantly lower rate of evaluation of other certificated staff.
5. Evaluation of teaching staff occurs primarily in the first year with a jurisdiction--90% of staff are evaluated during their first year with a system.
6. The majority (72%) of staff new to the profession are evaluated two or more times during their first year.
7. Tenured staff are evaluated considerably less frequently than are non-tenured staff.
8. Almost one-half of the jurisdictions do not use a standard form for evaluation of certificated staff.

9. In addition to using formal evaluations for making career decisions, such as permanent appointment, promotion, or dismissal, jurisdictions frequently use these evaluations for improving the performance of all categories of certificated staff.
10. Not all jurisdictions provided the person being evaluated with a copy of the written evaluation; 77% of the jurisdictions stated that they did this.
11. The data revealed that beginning teachers were being evaluated more frequently in 1980 than they had been in 1977.
12. In 1980, an increasing number of tenured teachers, teachers new to the system, and teachers new to teaching were being evaluated on an annual basis, as compared to 1977.
13. Between 1977 and 1980 the use of formal evaluations for the purpose of improving performance has dramatically increased. (18% in 1977 and 83% in 1980).
14. In 1977, only 18% of the jurisdictions reported that they used a standard form for evaluating certificated staff, while 52% did so in 1980.

To Alberta School System
Superintendents

Recently the Canadian Education Association, in cooperation with a number of other educational agencies, held a seminar on inservice and retraining of teachers and administrators. The seminar included representation from the major educational sectors across Canada and input from political and manpower specialists.

In the absence of more substantial evidence, seminar participants relied on their perceptions in concluding that few comprehensive personnel development programs for educators exist in Canada and that a major barrier to providing adequate professional development programs for teachers and administrators is the lack of comprehensive ongoing evaluation programs for them. Reinforcement of competent or outstanding teachers appears inadequate. In general, evaluation of teachers and administrators occurs only in the first two years of service in a position, during temporary appointment, or in crisis situations. In the crisis cases data often are not adequate as a basis for decisions on termination. Ad hoc solutions seem to be the order of the day, and too often termination rather than improved performance is the major objective. Except for Quebec, where after two years of successful teaching a teacher has life tenure although not permanent job placement, policies on teacher redundancy generally are of a "last in, first out" nature.

If the situation as outlined pertains in Alberta school systems also, then improvement in personnel management procedures is essential. Until 1970 the province had ongoing evaluation of teachers, with written reports considered an integral part of the teacher personnel file and deposited both locally and in the Registrar's office. Since 1970 the prime responsibility for teacher evaluation has rested with local jurisdictions. A 1977 study conducted by Dr. E.A. Holdaway and Mr. M.J. Reikie of the University of Alberta indicated that a substantial percentage (36%) of Alberta School jurisdictions had no policy on frequency of evaluations of tenured teachers, and only 29% of jurisdictions had standard forms for use in conducting and reporting such evaluations. There are no more recently collected data on the situation.

The purpose of this letter is to obtain from you an outline of the evaluation policies and procedures followed for all certificated personnel in your school system. A copy of relevant policy and procedures statements, with any attendant forms, would be appreciated. In addition I request that, whether or not you have such statements, you complete and return the attached brief questionnaire, which will facilitate summarizing the current situation in the province.

May I have this information by February 18, 1980 please.

Sincerely,

E.K. Hawkesworth
Deputy Minister of Education
